Fake customer service accounts on social media Chas

If you're having problems with an online order, complaining on social media is an effective way to get a company's attention, especially if it's not responding to you on other channels.

However, there are many scammers posing as customer service agents for retailers and couriers, attempting to trick customers into sharing their personal data. Beware!

Did You Know.....that 100 years ago in January 1926 BBC Radio Play Panic—A BBC broadcast by Ronald Knox depicting a workers' revolution in London caused widespread alarm among listeners who didn't realize it was satire, highlighting pre-strike anxieties. Television's Debut—John Logie Baird successfully demonstrated his mechanical television system in London to the Royal Institution, transmitting moving images via rotating disks, marking a pivotal moment for future broadcasting. Troop Withdrawal - British and Belgian forces departed Cologne, Germany, following the Locarno Treaties.

Parcel Delivery Scams

Following on from Christmas Shopping scams, here we are highlighting the fraudulent emails, texts and cards claiming to come from bona fide delivery companies but are not as they appear.

You have ordered goods from various online outlets and are perhaps now expecting multiple deliveries in the next few days. So, beware of any messages which may look as though they were sent from well-known delivery companies such as Royal Mail, DPD, Evri, and others.

These may claim that you have missed a delivery and either need to pay a fee for re-delivery or just offer a clickable link for organising a re-delivery.

In the rush of the build up to Christmas it can be easy to drop your guard and just click on that link but just take a minute or two to think.

Did you expect a parcel via that courier, if you are unsure, go back to your original order or delivery notification and use .

the tracking details on the genuine company website to see when your parcel is coming. Never click on links in suspicious emails or texts however realistic they seem. This also applies to fake cards coming through your letterbox and claiming to be from Royal Mail.

Fraudulent links can take you to sites that capture your financial information and hand it over to criminals. Always access websites by typing them into the web browser and avoid clicking on links in emails.

Finally, criminals are also active in following delivery vans and stealing any parcels left on doorsteps when residents are not at home. Arrange a "Safe" delivery location with your supplier if you are out, or have it delivered to a neighbour if possible
