Going Away? Prepare Your Home

Whether it is a fortnight's holiday, a weekend away or just an evening out, if you are planning a trip during the summer months you should take steps to secure your home against burglaries.

Put valuables out of plain sight so they are not easy to find should anyone gain entry. The West Midlands police warn that many criminals will be after car keys, so if you are not driving to your destination hide the keys in a safe, secure drawer or even take them with you. Putting them into a Faraday pouch (£6 at Halfords) will help prevent relay theft, whereby criminals use electronic devices to intercept the signal from key fobs and steal vehicles. Using a steering lock will also help.

Avoid obvious signs that you are away by cancelling milk and newspaper deliveries, and don't order anything online that may end up sitting on your doorstep. Secure the catflap closed, as long as the cat is also being looked after, and take all keys out of doors.

Using timers for lights (from £5.99 at Screwfix) will give the illusion that you are there in the evening. These plug into a socket and can turn on an attached table lamp at intervals set on the device.

Motion sensor lights, usually used outside, can also deter criminals. Alex Parker-Walklate of the brokers Intelligent Insurance says they can also alert neighbours to suspicious activity.

There is the potential for other nasty surprises as well as burglary. Turning off your water when you leave the house can prevent the threat of flood and water damage. Jonathan Cracknell from the insurer Aviva says this will also prevent huge bills from gushing water or undetected leaks. But if you have a fire sprinkler system installed, the water should be left on.

Home alarm units are graded from one to four, the higher being the more secure. Grade two is appropriate for most homes, says Parker-Walklate, and will include motion detector sensors around the perimeter of the property. It is important that an alarm is accredited by the National Security Inspectorate (NSI) or the Security Systems and Alarms Inspection Board (SSAIB), he says.

You should consider whether you want a monitored system, which contacts a key-holder or the police if there is a break-in, or an unmonitored one, which just sounds an alarm.

Criminals are more likely to abandon a burglary if motion sensors integrated into the system set off lights or an alarm. "If you do choose these security systems, it's important to ensure these sensors are properly maintained, well positioned, and – in the case of smart systems – securely connected to your home network," Parker-Walklate says.

Front and back doors should each have a five-lever mortise deadlock or a multipoint locking system, which is the type found on modern UPVC or composite doors. These systems secure the door at a number of points and offer greater resistance against force.

Smart doorbells and wifi-connected security cameras can act as a visible deterrent to criminals and can also provide footage if there is a break-in.

When buying one, look for the best image quality, reliable night vision and a wide-angle lens. Cloud storage is also desirable so that recordings are retained. The Guardian's Filter site found the Google Nest doorbell (priced at £178 on Amazon) was the most impressive all-rounder. If you do have a video doorbell or alarm connected to wifi, remember to keep your phone on and ensure push notifications are activated. Never leave your keys under a flowerpot or a doormat. As well as giving a burglar easy access, it will invalidate any insurance claim that you make when you return.
